

She was hit.

For those at court, IF and when we get to trial, we can furnish copies of the submitted complaint.

They are part of the body of evidence.

Incidentally, you have seen the person that hit her if you saw her being marched out with the hat pulled over her head the day after her interrogation. By the way, that action was not to hide her identity.

The complaint was filed the day after her, deemed illegal by the supreme court, interrogation.

As for your difficulty in accepting...I can certainly see why. This whole thing I believe that the chief of scientific investigations said that they needed not not being evidence? I actually dropped my glass of water I was holding I managed to get out when discussing it with the lawyers.
